

Ensuring Future Success with a state-of-the-art Audiovisual Conference Room System.

Canoochee EMC serves over 15,000 members in southeast Georgia by bringing electricity to rural areas as well as Hunter Army Airfield and Fort Stewart. As the company has continued to expand, they realized it was time to expand their facilities to help meet the growing needs of their members and employees. Canoochee broke ground on their new headquarters in Reidsville in April 2021.

The Challenge

With the development of their new headquarters, Canoochee EMC knew it would be important to invest in state-of-the-art audio and visual conferencing equipment to help set them up for future success. With the recent shift to remote work, they wanted their main conference room to have the ability for full engagement and participation in meetings, trainings, and more for both virtual and in person participants.

The Solution

After reviewing with the client, Speros went to action. We installed a ceiling mounted microphone beam to ensure everyone is heard no matter where they are seated in the room, or how loudly or softly they are speaking. Speakers were strategically placed throughout to allow high quality playback audio, so you don't miss a single word being said. A high-quality video camera and 80-inch display was also installed for optimal viewing. To encourage collaboration a hub was installed that allows any Windows, Mac, Android, or Apple device to be connected to the display to without needing an additional attachment. Lastly, the display was designed to have the full accessibility of a traditional workstation.

The Result

The new conference room setup allows Canoochee EMC to have more flexibility when conducting important meetings with staff, partners, and clients. They are no longer concerned with whether virtual attendees can actively hear and communicate when calling in. Furthermore, they can give professional presentations that effectively convey their message and goals.
